The way I train and race is the way I live my life. I take my competitions very seriously and I believe sport is the ultimate expression of one's self. This means that I pride myself on integrity, humbleness, sportsmanship, and hard work. I choose to have respect for my competitors, race organizers, and myself and always put forth my best effort. The journey is also important to me and I have a profound love for endurance sports. As a married father of three children, endurance sports are part of our lifestyle and I feel I am a role model in every race I do. I try to remain approachable especially to amateur athletes in the sport in my role as a coach, trainer, and fellow athlete on the course. I work with athletes of all ages and ability levels and I applaud all personal achievements. I also strive for balance in my life especially when it comes to family time and my kids' activities.
